

An Adjective is Worth a Thousand Words

The newsroom is quiet, as usual, when you walk in early in the morning. What's unusual is your boss standing at your desk. "You!" he bellows. "This latest batch of wacky biographic profiles for tomorrow's Peculiar People section is no good! They're too long - our advertisers are going to tear my ears off and eat them for breakfast!"

"But sir," you begin to protest, "most of those were only one sentence long! How could I possibly-"

"That's your job, not mine. I've left you a quote by each person, and I want a brief description of them for tomorrow's paper. And I mean BRIEF!" He storms out, leaving you to your task.
